Description of the activities:

"During my time at UNICAM, I carried out several activities of great scientific importance, as I will present next:

I visited the laboratories of CHIP (Chemistry Interdisciplinary Project Research Center), where I was able to see a variety of research equipment and exchange information with professors and students about the use and capabilities of each of these machines. It was a moment of great learning and exchange of important information for the possible realization of joint research in the future.

I also participated in an important meeting called 'Meeting University of Camerino and Universidade Estadual Paulista Julio de Mesquita Filho (UNESP)', where professors and postgraduate students from both institutions were present. On this occasion, I gave a lecture titled 'UNESP's contribution to science, education and global collaboration'. It was a very important moment for exchanging information about the two universities and what is done at each of them.

I participated in a scientific meeting with professors from UNESP and UNICAM, where the possibility of several collaborative research projects between the two universities was discussed.

In addition to all these activities, we visited other departments of UNICAM and the city of Camerino, always being very well taken care of by Professors Filippo Maggi and Giovanni Caprioli, who received us in a professional and friendly manner, always at our disposal for any type of activity.

In conclusion, this mobility was of great importance not only for me as a professor and researcher but also for my home university and also for having been important in strengthening significant scientific partnerships for both universities."
